

fluorochemical excellence

shaping the future

Petroleum

Hydrogen fluoride is used as catalyst in alkylation processes to improve the yield of petroleum fractions by reaction of low boiling propylene and butylene fractions with isobutene to generate high octane products. Higher octane fuels avoid the addition of environmentally harmful additives and burn more efficient, resulting in lower emissions and longer engine life.