

fluorochemical excellence
shaping the future

Refrigerants

Hydrogen fluoride is used in the production of fluorinated hydrocarbons which are used in domestic and industrial refrigeration applications such as refrigerators, freezers, airconditioners and heat transfer fluids. Fluorinated hydrocarbons are excellent substitutes for ozone depleting chlorofluorocarbons, however their stability goes with some global warming potential, although much less than common greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide.